

“More or less turned Windows into a carnival”

Wes Fenlon at PC Gamer:

Every so often, a wonderful thing happens: someone young enough to have missed out on using computers in the early 1990s is introduced to the Windows 3.1 "Hot Dog Stand" color scheme.

I can't figure out whether Gruber's take ("That's Microsoft.") is also a subtle jab at Apple in the year of Liquid Glass.

Also, great first comment under the original post:

I assume "Plasma Power Saver" served an actual purpose - it was intended for users of "portable" machines having a gas plasma display. Early ones were monochrome (orange) and I guess the actual color hue didn't matter so much as the intensity.

Early plasma displays were genuinely fascinating.

Newer

Older

19th December 2025

Fitts's Law at 20

16th December 2025

"Strangely primitive against the ...

Marcin Wichary © 2022-2025

Archive RSS feed Mastodon Email QR Code

Made with Montaigne and by anton 🇺🇦